PREFACE.

It is a remarkable fact in the history of education, that we should have so long continued the practice of studying the Greek language through the medium of the Latin; and that until very recently we have not had Greek, as well as Latin dictionaries, with explanations in English. In the period immediately succeeding the revival of letters, while the art of printing was in its infancy and the number of readers was very small, no one kingdom of Europe would of itself have afforded a sale for any considerable work written in the vernacular tongue; it was therefore natural, and indeed necessary, that lexicons, as well as other books, should be published in Latin, which was a language common to scholars in all countries. But circumstances have long since changed; and it may justly excite our wonder, that we should, till within about three years past (long since the prospectus of the present work was published), have been destitute of the most important of all books for the acquisition of the language in question, — A Greek and English Lexicon for the use of schools.

The fact seems the more extraordinary, because in the case of the modern languages we always begin our studies with dictionaries explained in our own tongue; nor should we think it practicable, in any other way, to master the niceties and peculiarities of a foreign idiom. Who, for example, would sit down to the study of French, or Italian, or German, with dictionaries written in Latin? And yet what essential difference (except as to pronunciation, which must be learned from the living instructer) can be imagined between the proper methods of studying a modern and an ancient language? For our part, we can entertain no doubt, that one principal reason, we will not say the only one, why Greek is so much less familiar to us than Latin, is the circuitous and awkward practice of studying it through the medium of a third language. "A great deal of the difficulty," says a late English writer, "which the Greek language presents to the youthful student is to be attributed to the circumstance of the best dictionaries, and most of the best grammars, being written in Latin; a language into which it is impossible to transfuse the spirit or the idiomatic peculiarities of the Greek, and in itself more difficult of acquirement."* Nor is this by any means a new opinion; for, so long ago as when the well known "Port Royal Grammar" was written, which is now more than a hundred and fifty years, the learned author of that work ascribed the superficial knowledge of Greek among his countrymen to the same cause. "It seems to me," says he, "that one of the things which most retards our progress in learning Greek is this, that we do not sufficiently accustom ourselves to compare it immediately with our own language, but always lead our thoughts in a circuitous way through a Latin interpretation."†

But it is unnecessary to extend the remarks upon this point any farther. The utility of Greek lexicons in the vernacular languages is now generally acknowledged. The Germans, who have so thoroughly studied the art of education, have for a considerable time had lexicons explained in their own language; and the French have followed their example. In England, too, besides Parkhurst's Lexicon to the New Testament, which has gone through many editions, there have been two or three general lexicons published since the present work was first announced. This last fact, it may be remarked by the way, forms a striking contrast with the opinion expressed by an eminent statesman and Greek scholar in England, five-and-twenty years ago, as to the probable demand there would be for lexicons of this kind. In the well known "Correspondence" of Mr. Fox and Mr. Wakefield, during the years 1799 and

1800, the former of them has these remarks: — "I think a lexicon in Greek and English is a work much wanted; and if you can have patience to execute such a work, I shall consider it a great benefit to the cause of literature. . . . . I see innumerable advantages in an English interpretation, to which the only objection is, that it will confine the sale to this country; and how far it may be possible to get two thousand subscriptions for a work useful only to English readers of Greek, I am afraid is doubtful." *

Under a strong conviction, therefore, that it will be rendering an essential service to the interests of sound literature in our country to promote the study of the language of Greece, — which an accomplished scholar characterizes in glowing terms as "the finest ever spoken by mortals," † and whose authors will be models in writing as long as the works of her sculptors and architects shall be models in the fine arts, — under this conviction, the Editors offer to their countrymen the present work; of which they will now give a brief account.

The basis of the work is Schrevelius's well known Lexicon; which, on the whole, in the present state of Greek studies in this country, was thought preferable to any other manual adapted to the use of schools.

That work has been long in general use in England, and has passed through numerous editions in that as well as other parts of Europe. Dr. Knox, whose judgment in a question of practical education is entitled to much respect, in comparing it with the other Lexicons in use at the time when he wrote, observes, though perhaps in stronger terms than he would use at the present day, that "Schrevelius is with great propriety everywhere used; that it is particularly adapted to the Greek Testament and to Homer; and is well suited both to the beginner and to the proficient in Greek." ‡

The Editors are aware of the objections which have been made to Schrevelius's work by some writers of authority; but those objections are almost exclusively applicable to the Latin interpretation, which, it must be acknowledged, is extremely defective. Considered, however, as a simple vocabulary of the Greek language, particularly with the numerous additions which have been made of the words occurring in the various school-books that have been introduced since the author's time, it appears to be sufficiently ample and well suited to the use for which it was originally designed, — the use of the younger classes of Greek students. Indeed, it would seem natural, that a work, which has been gradually built up and augmented with new words in proportion as the introduction of new books created new wants in our schools, should be sufficiently well adapted to those wants. This mode of constructing a work, however, by the labors of successive editors, undoubtedly exposes it to an objection of another kind, — the want of unity in design and execution. But the want of that unity will not be so much felt in a dictionary as in books of some other descriptions. Schrevelius's work was originally extracted from that of Scapula (an edition of which he superintended), and seems to have been first published in 1654. It was more particularly intended for the Old and New Testaments, Homer, Hesiod, Musæus, Theognis, Pythagoras and other Gnomic authors, Isocrates, Æsop, &c.; the author also made use of Portus's Ionic and Doric Lexicons, and the Lexicon to Pindar and the other Lyric poets. It was published several times on the continent of Europe during the author's life; and within that period was also republished in England by Hill, who enlarged it considerably, more particularly with words from the New Testament, the Septuagint, and the principal poets and orators, as well as the school-books of the day. He also added many of the aorists and other tenses, which are so profusely and unnecessarily scattered through the work. Besides the editorial labor bestowed upon it in England, it has received improvements in France, where a valuable edition of it was published in 1779 by the celebrated scholar Vauvilliers; who, as the late editor Lécluse observes, "mercilessly" retrenched all the expositions of the anomalous words, and other parts of the work. These retrenchments have been restored by Lécluse, whose edition of 1819 is the latest French one that happens to have come to our knowledge. Of the other editions, we have before us the Italian one in folio, and a German one, reprinted, from the Paris copy, at Vienna in 1822, under the editorial superintendence of Kritsch; who justly observes, that the Lexicon, as now published, is very different from the ancient editions, both in copiousness and explanations; and he adds, that in its present state it may with propriety be recommended to the student in Greek literature. It may now be proper to give a brief account of the labo. which has been bestowed upon the present publication.

This work was originally planned many years ago, and was begun by the original Editor in the year 1814; but the ordinary avocations of a professional life so frequently interrupted its progress, that the Editor, for that and other reasons, some years afterwards engaged the assistance of his associate, Dr. Daniel Oliver, Professor of Moral and Intellectual Philosophy at Dartmouth College. A prospectus of it was accordingly issued by them a few years ago, and the work has been in progress to this time. The reasons of the delay which has taken place are not of a nature to require any particular explanation. It will suffice to remark, that the very great labor which it demanded, and of which no judgment could be formed by the inexperienced, was not anticipated by the Editors; if it had been, they would probably have shrunk from the undertaking; but it has also proceeded in part from professional engagements, and in part also from the smallness of the fount of types originally procured for it.

In the execution of their task, the Editors have not contented themselves with being translators of Schrevelius's Latin interpretations, which are often ambiguous and unsatisfactory; but they have, to the best of their ability, rendered the English explanations from the original Greek. It will be at once perceived, that the significations given are more copious than the Latin ones of Schrevelius. This has been occasioned partly by the difficulty of always finding single English words which would correspond to the Greek so exactly as many of the Latin terms do; but principally from a desire to obviate the embarrassment arising from the ambiguity of the general terms used in the Latin, by substituting for them English significations less general and of course more precise. It has been the intention of the Editors, that the work should comprehend all the words which are to be found in Professor Dalzel's Collectanea Majora and Minora, Jacobs's Greek Reader, and the other books now studied in our schools and other seminaries of learning; but, notwithstanding the pains taken in this respect, they dare not flatter themselves with having accomplished it. Any omissions of this kind, however, may be supplied in a future edition.

Those persons who have been accustomed to the thorough modes of instruction which are adopted in European seminaries may perhaps think it would have been an improvement to have expunged the numerous derived tenses of the verbs, which occur so frequently in almost every page of the original work. It is often said, that this ready aid is apt to encourage indolence in the scholar, who ought to make himself master of the methods of forming the tenses by means of his grammar, instead of relying upon his lexicon. The argument on this point is not without weight; and if the Editors had consulted their own wishes alone, they might have thought it best to strike out a large proportion of those derivatives. But, besides being desirous of making as few alterations as possible in the original vocabulary of a work, to which every teacher in the country has been so long accustomed, the Editors were apprehensive, that, in the present state of our Greek studies, it might be taking too great a step at once, to reduce the work to such a form as would be better suited to the advanced state of distinguished foreign institutions than to our own. Another consideration also had its weight; that is, the possibility that, amidst the various improvements which are taking place in the modes of education, it might happen that our teachers would make their pupils commence their classical studies with Greek instead of Latin, — a method, which, as will presently be seen, has the sanction of the very highest authority.

Among the improvements, as the Editors hope they may be called, in the present work, they would state, that upwards of two thousand articles in it are either wholly new, or have new additions, of more or less importance; these articles are distinguished by a bracket placed at the end of them. Besides the additions thus marked, very numerous references to authors have been inserted without being thus designated. The prepositions have been a particular subject of attention; and the uses of the article are explained with as much minuteness as would be advantageous to that class of students for which the work is chiefly designed. Another improvement, and one which was not adopted in any edition of Schrevelius till a long time after the present work was begun, is the marking of the quantities of the doubtful vowels. This has been done, for the most part, without sacrificing the accents; and in those instances where the accent does not appear, the student will know that it has been displaced in order to make room for the quantity; and he will without much difficulty decide, by the place of the syllable, what kind of accent should be supplied. The Editors may here observe, that their work is printed with the accents; for they cannot but consider them to be as much a part of the language as the breathings, or the alphabetic characters themselves are, whatever opinions may be entertained by some scholars as to the particular use of them. But, besides being a constituent part of the language, they are of real utility in the study of it. That eminent scholar, Wyttenbach, in giving an account of the publication of his "Selecta Principum Historicorum," says, — "In accentibus verò ne turbaretur eò magis cavimus, quòd eorum observatione pars haud contemnenda accuratæ rationis grammaticæ continetur";* and Porson, with his accustomed tone of independence and unsparing severity, says to his young pupils, — "Siquis igitur vestrûm ad accuratam Græcarum literarum scientiam aspirat, is probabilem sibi accentuum notitiam quàm maturrime comparet, in propositoque perstet, scurrarum dicacitate et stultorum irrisione immotus."† With these and various other high authorities on the same side, therefore, it is not without some surprise, that the Editors find the accents omitted in the valuable Lexicon lately published by Dr. Jones; who retains "only the circumflex."‡ The scholars of England, however, with few exceptions, are of a different opinion in respect to the importance of the accents; and Bishop Horsley does not hesitate to say, with his usual energy of language, that it is "to the disgrace of the literature of the country," that the rules of the Greek accents should not be taught in the schools; adding, in terms of reprobation, that "the practice is stealing in of printing Greek without the marks of accent; though no edition of any author has yet come forth, in this undress, from the press of either of our universities"; to which last general remark, however, he afterwards makes an exception of what he calls, with some mortification, "the unfortunate instance of the Oxford Theocritus," an example which he hopes "will not be followed."§ It is true, that the study of the accents, as well as of some other particulars in the languages of the classic writers, may be thought to partake too much of what has been called "minute accuracy"; but, as an eminent British statesman and scholar has justly observed, "this accuracy forms the criterion of a perfect familiarity with those authors, — authors who were the models of thought, the masters of moral teaching and of civil wisdom, and above all things, of civil liberty."‖

The study of the metres has, in the same manner, been considered by a few distinguished scholars on the continent of Europe to be of comparatively little value; while in England it has been prosecuted with ardor, and, possibly, beyond its real importance. Yet those eminent scholars who have neglected this part of Greek learning have commonly been found afterwards to regret it. In short, it may be remarked, generally, that in our acquisitions of almost every species of knowledge, a great many of the appendages seem, at first view, to be useless, or only to serve the purpose of embarrassing our progress; which afterwards prove to have been not wholly without some beneficial effect in respect to the main object. In languages, however, the question is not, what they ought to be, but what they are; and, if they are worth studying at all, either for the literature contained in them, or on any other account, we must study them as they are, if we would attain to exactness in this, as well as other knowledge. One thing is clear; that such of the minutiæ of language as are to be learned at all, should be studied in youth, when the memory is most tenacious, and the understanding feels little or no impatience at being employed in labor of that kind.

The Editors will now make a few remarks respecting the manner in which they have endeavoured to execute their task. In the progress of the work almost all the Lexicons extant have been occasionally consulted; those which have been most frequently resorted to are Hedericus, Planche's excellent "Dictionnaire Grec-François," and Schneider's admirable "Griechisch-Deutsches Wörterbuch"; and, for Scriptural words, the highly valuable edition of Wahl's "Lexicon to the New Testament," by Mr. Robinson, of the Theological Institution at Andover. The learned Lexicon of Dr. Jones was not received, until so much progress had been made in the present work as to prevent much use of it; and, just before the last sheets were printed off, a copy of the London translation of Schrevelius reached this country; which, till the Editors had looked into it, made them regret that they had not sooner met with it. A slight examination, however, made it apparent, that, although it contained many additional words, yet it was a hurried performance, upon which it would not have been safe to rely.

The etymologies, both Hebrew and others, notwithstanding the unsoundness and fanciful nature of some of them, have been preserved, for the same reason that has operated in regard to some other things; that is, a wish to deviate as little as possible from the original work, to which our teachers, as well as pupils, have been so long accustomed.

The Latin tracts "De Resolutione Verborum" and "De Articulis," and the "Breves Sententiæ Græcæ," which are usually subjoined to Schrevelius, are omitted; the two former are superseded by more modern and better treatises, and the latter are never studied. The second part of the original Schrevelius, that is, the Latin and Greek part, or, as it would be in the present case, the English and Greek part, is likewise omitted. The writing of Greek exercises being but little practised in this country at present (a state of things, which it is to be hoped will not much longer continue), and the great expense and labor of so large a work as the two parts together would make, are the motives for publishing only the most necessary of the two at this time; but it has always been the intention of the Editors to publish an English and Greek part; which they hope will have a tendency to make the writing of Greek exercises as much a part of our studies as the writing of Latin, and thus render the knowledge of the former as familiar as that of the latter. They may observe, however, that this second part is not added either to Planche's or Schneider's Lexicon.

It may, perhaps, be thought out of place to have inserted in a work of this kind any thing like a critical discussion of the meaning of a word, or the various readings of manuscripts; of which some instances will be found under the following words, — ἀδίματος, ἀελλάδες, ἀναῤῥιπτέω, ἀντέχω, ἔρσις, ϑηπτός, κάθαρσις, μέχρι, παραμένω, ποικιλόδειρος, ὑποκρίνομαι, χεράδος, and others. This, however, has been very sparingly done; the reason of its being done in any instance has been, because critical editions of the Greek writers are not often to be found in the hands of our instructers; and it was believed, that such brief remarks as are inserted of this kind might be of use, in removing difficulties occasioned by corrupt readings of the text in the common school editions, and in relieving the mind of the teacher, in some instances, from an apprehension of ignorance on his part in regard to passages which, perhaps, have perplexed the greatest scholars.

Of the authors in the "Collectanea Majora," those which have been a particular subject of attention on the part of the Editors are Herodotus, Thucydides, Longinus, and Aristotle; the last of whom, from the abstruse nature of his discussions, and his condensed manner of writing, presents very great difficulties to the young student. But, to adopt a remark of the poet Gray, "he has abundance of fine uncommon things, which makes him well worth the pains he gives one"; * it was, therefore, thought useful, that a portion of the editorial labor should be allotted particularly to his language; in the hope, that those young men who are ambitious of thinking profoundly, reasoning closely, and judging correctly may be incited to study the works of one of the greatest masters of thinking and reasoning that the world has ever seen.

The Editors have to add here a few remarks upon a point which has been already alluded to; that is, the question whether Greek should be studied before Latin. Without having the presumption to give an opinion as the result of much experience of their own, they cannot withhold that which they have for some time entertained; nor can they forbear asking the attention of the reader to the sentiments of eminent writers, who are in favor of commencing with Greek. Hemsterhuys and Ruhnken, whose names are well known to every scholar as of the very highest authority, strongly recommended that method. "Ita enim," says the biographer of Ruhnken, "et ipse judicabat et Hemsterhusium judicantem audiebat, præposterum esse puerilis institutionis ordinem, quo primum Latinis, deinde Græcis imbuimur literis";* and this biographer himself, who has been called by English writers "the first scholar on the continent," and who spoke from more than twenty years' experience as a teacher, expresses his own opinion as strongly to the same effect. "Intra breve tempus," says he, "eâ dem facilitate Græcos, quâ nunc Latinos, intelligetis auctores. Neque, profecto, nisi ad hunc facultatis gradum perveniamus, operæ pretium est tantos labores exantlâsse. Sane hoc gradu jam essetis, et Latinæ simul linguæ multo uberiorem accuratioremque teneretis scientiam, si puerilis disciplinæ rudimenta prius in Græcis quàm Latinis posuissetis literis."† To these opinions it may be thought superfluous to add any other; but the following remarks of that indefatigable and ardent scholar, Gibbon, who will not be suspected of prejudices in this case, may have weight with some persons, who may not be influenced by those before cited. "It is scarcely possible," says he, "for a mind endowed with any active curiosity to be long conversant with the Latin classics, without aspiring to know the Greek originals, whom they celebrate as their masters, and of whom they so warmly recommend the study and imitation,—

'Vos exemplaria Græca
Nocturnâ versate manu, versate diurnâ.'

It was now that I regretted the early years which had been wasted in sickness or idleness, or more idle reading; that I condemned the perverse method of our schoolmasters, who, by first teaching the mother language, might descend with so much ease and perspicuity to the origin and etymology of a derivative idiom." §

It now only remains to inform the reader of the portions of the labor which have been shared by the Editors respectively. From the letter B to O, inclusive, the translation was made by Professor Oliver; the residue was translated by the original Editor, or under his direction; in which part of the labor he received important assistance from Benjamin L. Oliver, Esq., of Salem, and Mr. George R. Noyes, of the University; and he is also responsible for nearly all the additional matter which has been incorporated into the various articles, as well as for the entire revision of the whole work.

The Editors cannot dismiss this work without making their most grateful acknowledgments to the several gentlemen who have obligingly aided them, in a greater or less degree, in their laborious task; among whom it will not be deemed invidious to designate that profound scholar who now fills the chair of the Greek professorship at the University in Cambridge.

Notwithstanding the great care used in correcting the press, both by the original Editor, and by that intelligent scholar whose skilful superintendence of the University Press gives so high a value to its classical publications, there will probably be found various typographical errors, particularly in the accentual and other marks. Those persons who have any acquaintance with that part of an editor's duty will easily imagine what an Herculean labor it must be to carry a work of this nature and magnitude through the press; it is believed, however, that it will be found to be more free from errors of that sort than usual; certain it is, that no pains have been spared to insure the greatest accuracy. Whatever may prove to be the fact, either in respect to this or any thing else for which the Editors are to be considered in any degree responsible, the public, it is believed, will be entirely satisfied with the execution of all that belongs to the printer's department; particularly the type, which, though small, is uncommonly beautiful and distinct, and well adapted to a book of this description.

The work is now submitted by the Editors, with much diffidence, to the candor of their countrymen.

ADVERTISEMENT TO THE SECOND EDITION.

The rapid sale of the first edition of this work has made it necessary to prepare a new one much sooner than was expected. The whole work has now been revised and very large additions have been made to it, but without materially increasing the number of pages; this has been effected by arranging the page in three columns, instead of two as in the former edition. More than ten thousand entire articles and very numerous parts of articles, of more or less importance, have been added to the original work. In making these additions, the Editor has particularly kept in view the different Greek authors which are usually read in our colleges and schools; and of these, the dramatic writers have been more fully explained than was done in the former edition. But other Greek classics have also been the subject of attention. The uses of the prepositions have been further illustrated by examples, and improvements made in the arrangement of the matter under several of them. The unsatisfactory Hebrew etymologies, which had been retained in the former edition, for the reasons given in the Preface, have been struck out of the present one; and this, with the expunging of a few mere repetitions, is the only retrenchment which has been made. Particular care has been taken to designate the quantities; which, in the former edition, were but partially noted.

Besides the various Lexicons used in the first edition, the Editor has consulted all that he has since been able to obtain from England and from the continent of Europe. Of the English ones, that of Donnegan, which is substantially an abridged translation of Schneider's German work, has been the most used; valuable matter has also been derived from that of Jones, and occasional reference has been had to all the other English works of this kind. Of the continental Lexicons, besides Schneider's, which was used in the former edition, the Editor has also made use of Riemer's (which is abridged from that, but has much valuable original matter) and Passow's late excellent "Handwörterbuch der Griechischen Sprache," or Manual of the Greek Language, in Greek and German, edition of 1828; this latter, however, was not obtained till a part of the present work was printed.

The Editor cannot omit making his acknowledgments to those gentlemen who have obligingly aided him by useful suggestions in regard to the work generally, as well as by additions to the vocabulary. Among these he feels bound to express his particular obligations to several professors and instructers in our colleges and other literary institutions.

It is proper to state, that, in consequence of an arrangement made with his former associate, the property of this work is now in the original Editor, who alone is responsible for the present edition.

ADVERTISEMENT TO THE PRESENT EDITION.

[The following pages were prepared by Mr. Pickering for a prospectus of the present edition of his Greek and English Lexicon, but were not published. As the recent death of Mr. Pickering prevented him from incorporating these remarks into a General Preface, the publishers now deem it proper to reprint his Preface and Advertisement to the First and Second Editions of his Lexicon, and to subjoin the following statement, from his own hand, in relation to the present edition, which passed under his laborious and careful revision.]

The proposed work is a new and extensively revised edition of the Greek and English Lexicon which was originally published at Boston in the year 1826, and was the first Greek and English one published in the United States. The original work was indeed projected, and in part executed, in the year 1814; and but for unavoidable delays in carrying it through the press, it would have been the first general Lexicon of the Greek language that had ever been published with English interpretations. But, after the announcement of the work, and in consequence of the delays alluded to, opportunity was afforded for the publication of a similar work in England, — Jones's Greek and English Lexicon, — which appeared in the year 1823. That work, however, though it exhibited those proofs of solid scholarship, which were to have been expected from the able author, was constructed upon a plan not well adapted to learners. It accordingly failed of being generally received in the schools and colleges of England; and the Editors of the American work, being well satisfied that it would not supersede their labors, decided to proceed with their work, which was accordingly completed, and was issued from the press in the year 1826. Its highly favorable reception by the American public justified this decision; for, though a very large edition of it was printed, yet so general was the demand for it throughout the United States, that a second edition was immediately called for, and was published (1829) in a little more than two years after the first. The next year (1830) it was reprinted, with additions, at Edinburgh, and recommended to public notice as a "very useful and popular work."

The basis of the original work was the Greek and Latin Lexicon of Schrevelius, which had been in use for a long series of years both in England and in this country, and to which both teachers and pupils had been so long accustomed, that it was believed it would be practically more useful — as Greek studies were then pursued in the United States — to take that well known work for the basis of the first Greek and English Lexicon, than to attempt at once to bring the public up to the high standard at which Greek literature had then arrived in the Old World, particularly in Germany, by taking a more elaborate and critical Lexicon for the basis of a work suited to the wants of our country at that period. The Editors of the original edition, however, did not content themselves with being mere translators of Schrevelius's Lexicon. In fact, that work served principally as a mere vocabulary of the Greek Language; which, as it had been formed by successive editors, in a long course of years, of the words found in Homer and the more common Greek classics used in schools and colleges, as well as of the words of the New Testament, would be found to include all the most necessary and useful words of the language. But, as the course of Greek studies had been at that period much extended, the American work was proportionably enlarged, and in the second edition more than ten thousand entire articles, and very numerous parts of articles, were added to the work.

Since the publication of that edition, the progress of Greek studies in the United States has been such, as to demand a more enlarged vocabulary of the language in the lexicons intended for schools and colleges. Students are not now contented with the slight tincture of Greek learning which was then to be gleaned from the common school-books and (too often) under the instruction of imperfectly educated teachers. We now find there is a demand for such Greek works as the Comedies of Aristophanes, the Tragedies of Æschylus, Sophocles, and Euripides, the Orations of Demosthenes, the Dialogues of Plato, and various other authors heretofore considered to be beyond the circle of an ordinary classical education; and we now find in various parts of our country, — what was then rare, — able scholars, who can supply that demand by useful and critical editions of some of those works.*

To supply the want of a Lexicon adapted to this more advanced state of Greek studies has been the object of the present publication. Since the last edition of our work, indeed, some other Greek and English Lexicons have appeared in England, and have been republished in this country; and of these the work of Donnegan, professedly in substance a translation of Passow's admirable Greek and German one, is the most important. But this Lexicon, which was originally severely criticised by an able English scholar,† has, upon experiment, been found not to satisfy the wants of the public, although improved, as far as was practicable on the author's plan, by that able American scholar under whose editorial care it was republished in this country.‡ It is not, however, our intention on this occasion to pronounce an opinion upon the merits or defects of this or any other work of the kind. We simply state the fact, that, from some cause, the work in question has not satisfied the public. Accordingly, we find in England a new and more copious Lexicon has been since published by Messrs. Liddell and Scott, which is also in substance an English translation of Passow's great work, and is a most valuable and important acquisition to all who wish to study Greek critically. The work, however, is more copious than is necessary for a school or college book; and the learned editors have accordingly issued an abridged edition of it for the use of schools.

Upon examination of this valuable Lexicon, however, the publishers have not found reason to abandon their plan of publishing the present work.

But, without entering upon the invidious task of making a comparison of the labors of their predecessors, they will now merely state what it is proposed to do in the present edition. The work will contain the entire vocabulary of the last edition, and that of Liddell and Scott's smaller Lexicon, and also of Professor Dunbar's Greek and English Lexicon, published at Edinburgh in the year 1843; both of which have been collated for that purpose. And here, in order to prevent any misconception or suspicion of plagiarism on the part of the American Editor, it is proper to state, that Professor Dunbar's Lexicon, in the first edition, was in substance a reprint of the second edition of the American work, and was acknowledged so to be in the Preface; though in the second edition no acknowledgment whatever is made, that would lead the reader to suppose this to be the case. We advert to the fact, not on account of the great value we may be supposed to attach to our humble labors, but simply to inform the reader, who may happen to notice the close resemblance of the two works, that this has not been in consequence of our having committed a plagiarism upon Professor Dunbar.

We do not pretend to enumerate all the American editions of Greek works; but only such as occur to us at the moment while we are writing.

† Quart. Rev., Vol. LI., No. CI.

‡ Professor Patton.

We ought, however, in justice to that learned gentleman, to add, that he has made many valuable additions to the American work; and we shall feel at liberty to avail ourselves of such of them as in our judgment shall fall within our plan; but we shall, assuredly, not do this without making all due acknowledgments to that learned editor for his useful services; while, at the same time, we may take the liberty also to express our opinions frankly on points on which we happen to differ from him or have our doubts.*

In addition to the two Lexicons of Dunbar and of Liddell and Scott, constant reference has been had to the larger Lexicon of the latter gentleman, as well as to the original German of Passow's own masterly work, and to the new and enlarged edition of it by Professors Rost and Palm, the publication of which was begun in 1843 (in two volumes, royal octavo, of about 1600 pages each) and is still going on in Germany. We have also made constant use of two other new and copious Greek and German Lexicons now publishing in Germany; one by Professors Jacobitz and Seidler, in two volumes, octavo, and the other by Professor Pape, in three volumes, octavo, besides making frequent use of the older ones of Schneider and Riemer, and the numerous Lexicons and Verbal Indexes to particular authors; and lastly, to that immense and well known repository of Greek literature, Stephens's Thesaurus, which is now in course of publication at Paris, accompanied with the numerous corrections and improvements demanded by the advanced state of Greek studies in Europe.

It is not necessary to enter into many details of our proposed edition; it may be proper, however, to state, that it is our intention to retain, in the order of the alphabet, as heretofore, the oblique cases and principal dialectical or unusual forms of anomalous and other nouns, adjectives, and pronouns, and the principal tenses of anomalous verbs; for though it is true, as is often said, that these are things to be learnt from the grammar, yet it is also true, in practice, that the lexicon ought to comprehend them to a certain extent; which will, however, be larger or more limited, according to the opinion that shall prevail in respect to the wants of the particular community for whose use such a work shall be intended. So far, however, as the Editor's observation has extended, even in Germany, the Lexicons continue to retain those cases, tenses, &c. to a very considerable extent; in Great Britain it has been carried still farther. A principal objection to it has been, that it has a tendency to encourage indolence in the scholar, and the argument is not without some weight; but all admit that some inflections and irregularities should be inserted in the alphabetical order; and then the question is reduced to one of mere expediency, upon which there will always be a difference of opinion. We have endeavoured to preserve a reasonable medium in this respect; and in order to oblige the student to recur to the radical from which the derived tense or case is formed, we have in almost all instances expunged the particular translations which accompanied those cases or tenses, and which (where no reference was made to a particular passage of an author) only tended to mislead and misinform the student as to the real extent and general import of the Greek word.

Such is the outline of the work now to be offered to the public. It is our intention to offer it to our American instructers and their pupils, as a Lexicon for the use of schools and colleges; and it is intended to embrace only that common learning (if learning it may be called) which belongs to a book of that class; though a brief critical remark may be occasionally made upon a doubtful reading, or some other matter which may require such a notice, for the sake of those students who may not have at hand any work of reference to which they may have recourse.

With these remarks, the publishers will submit their work to the judgment of a candid and discriminating public.

Boston, August 20, 1846.

* In Dr. Major's translation of Schrevelius, the fifth edition of which was published at London in 1843, an acknowledgment of our labors is very frankly and honorably made.

GREEK AND ENGLISH LEXICON.

Α is the first letter of the Greek alphabet, and is called ἄλφα from aleph, the first letter of the Hebrews. As a numeral, ά with a mark over it stands for εἷς, one, and πρῶτος, first; as β′ does for two or second, γ′, for three or third, etc.; but with a mark underneath, ᾳ, it denotes a thousand. — In compound words it is variously used: (1) Sometimes it is στερητικόν, or has a privative or negative power, like the English syllables in, im, un, dis, etc., as βέβαιος, stable, ἀβέβαιος, unstable; in which cases, if the principal or radical word begins with a vowel, the letter ν is inserted, as ἄξιος, worthy, ἀνάξιος, unworthy; this insertion of the ν, according to some, is for the sake of euphony; but, as others say, it is the adverb ἄνευ abbreviated to its first syllable; some words, however, are thus compounded, without adding the ν, as ἀόρατος, invisible, ἄοσμος, scentless, ἀήττητος, invincible; others change their terminations, as ἡδύς, agreeable, ἀηδής, disagreeable; others, again, suffer a contraction, as ἀργός for ἄεργος, idle, unemployed: (2) Sometimes it is ἐπιτατικόν, an intensive, answering (as some think) to the adverb ἄγαν very, or much, that is, it augments or gives intensity to the usual force of a word, as ἄξυλος, very woody or thick-wooded, Iliad xi, 155 (see remarks under Ἄξυλος); ἀστιγής for πολυστιγής· ἀχανής, ἄβιος, etc.: (3) Sometimes, with the poets, it is equivalent to δύς, signifying difficulty of doing any thing, as ἅβατος for δύσβατος, difficult to be passed, not easily passable: (4) Sometimes it has the force of ἅμα or ὁμοῦ, with, together with, as ἄκοιτις, ἄλοχος, partaking of the same bed, being of the same bed with, i. e. a wife: (5) But in some words, chiefly those beginning with two consonants, the α may be added, or taken away, particularly in the Ionic and Attic dialects, without varying the signification, so that it may be called redundant; as ἀβληχρός, βληχρός· ἀσπαίρω, σπαίρω· ἄσταχυς, στάχυς· ἀναρῆται, νηῖται· στράβηλοι, ἀστράβηλοι. To this class may be referred the reduplication of α by the epic poets, for the sake of the metre, as ἀάσχετος, etc. The α in these cases is short, unless made long by position or by the necessity of the metre; as in ἀθάνατος. In N. T. τὸ Α καὶ τὸ Ω, the first and the last, the beginning and the end.

Α, for ε, Dor. as αἴτι, for εἴτε.

Α, for ω, Dor. gen. pl. either simply αν without the accent, or ᾶν with a circumflex; thus α is used for ω in words of the fifth (third) declension of simple nouns; as Ποσειδᾶν, ᾶνος, ὁ, for Ποσειδῶν, ῶνος. So χρυσάων for χρυσῶων, from χρυσόω· βοᾶσι for βοῶσι.

Α for ἡ, Dor. art. the; and ᾰ for ἥ, pron. rel. who, which; ᾗ for ᾗ, dat. sing. fem. of ὅς, used adverbially, where, in which place.

Α, nom. plur. neut. of ὅ.

Α, ἀά, the cry of one calling out with great earnestness, either for help, or wondering, or wishing; also an expression of reproaching or reprehension; ἄ, ἄ, ah, ah, is also the cry of one lamenting; from ἄ.

Α, ᾱ, interj. ha, ha, ha, denote laughter, as in Latin and English.

Α, an exclamation denoting sorrow, pity, dissatisfaction or anger.

Ἀᾱτος, and ἀάατος, ου, ὁ, ἡ, with a double privative, or pleonasm of α, inviolable, not to be violated with impunity, as by breaking an oath; ἀᾱτον Στυγὸς ὕδωρ, the inviolable or sacred waters of the Styx, by which the gods swear, Iliad xiv, 271; ἄιθλον ἀάατον, an irreproachable, i. e. an honorable or worthy contest, or, as some render it, a decisive or undeceiving contest, as to its result, Odys. xxi, 91; κάρτος ἀᾱτος, invincible, invulnerable, that cannot be hurt, Ap. Rhod. ii, 77, injurious; also harmless, innoxious; also unsatisfied. From α and ἄω or ἄτω, to hurt. Th. ἀτάω. Ἄατος has the same signification. In the Il. the quantity is ᾱᾱτος, in the Odys. ᾰᾰτος.

Ἀᾱγής, ῆος, ὁ, ἡ, difficult to break, infrangible; hence, massy, strong, Odys. xi. 574; unbroken. From α and ἄγω, to break. In Odys. ᾱᾱγης, in Ap. Rhod. ᾱᾱγης.

Ἀλλ', for ἀλλά and ἄλλο.

Ἄλλα, accented on the first syllable, neut. plur. of the adj. ἄλλος, other, another, etc.; but Ἄλλᾰ, accented on the last syllable, a conjunction (originally the neut. pl. of ἄλλος), but, nevertheless, notwithstanding, yet, at least, etc. It is used either alone or connected with other particles, as in the following examples; its fundamental idea being, that of difference or diversity, i. e. another thing than what had been mentioned before in discourse, etc.

I. When alone, it is used (1) to indicate diversity, discrimination or distinction, and opposition; as ἀνίγνως, ἀλλ' οὐκ ἔγνως, you read, but you did not understand; οὐκ ὑπ' ἀνάγκης ἀλλ' ἑκόντες, not by necessity, but voluntarily; and in this use, ἀλλά often supplies the place of δέ after μέν (2) in prose, for ἤ, than, as, μηδένα ἕτερον εἶναι τὸν .... φονέα, ἀλλ' Ἀρίσταρχον, that there was no other murderer... than Aristarchus, Demosth. c. Mid. p. 554, 15, ed. Reisk.; (3) after a negation, for εἰ μή, except; as, ἄλλος δ' οὔτις. ... ἀλλά φίλη μήτηρ, no one .... except or unless my beloved mother, Iliad xxi, 276; (4) in expressions of exhortation or encouragement; as ἀλλὰ πίθεσθε, be persuaded then, in which there is an allusion to something different which has preceded; in this sense it is often joined with ἄγε, ἄγετε, ἴθι, ἴτε, etc.; ἀλλ' ἄνοιγε τὴν Σύραν, come, open the door, Aristoph. Nub. 183; (5) at least, certainly; as πειράσατε ἀλλ' ὑμεῖς, but do you at least make a trial, Soph. Œd. Col. 1276; ἀλλὰ δίχομαι, certainly I accept, Xen. Cyrop. iv, 5, 51. (6) Ἀλλά after ἄλλος has the force of ἤ, than; αἴτιος ἄλλος ἀλλὰ τοκῆε δύω, (I have) no other cause for it than my two parents, Odys. viii, 311; xxi, 72; (7) it is also used for ἄλλως

II. Ἀλλά is used with various other particles and words, as in the following examples, in which they are arranged alphabetically:

Ἀλλ' ἄγε or ἄγετε, in exhorting, come, come on then, come I intreat you, etc.

—— ἄγε δή, but come on, at least come on then.

—— ἄρα, but yet more, but still further, but certainly.

—— γάρ, but indeed; as ἀλλὰ γὰρ, ὦ Σώκρατες, but indeed,

Socrates, Xen. Mem. ii, 1, 17; it is also used when a reason is given, as, ἀλλὰ γὰρ Κρίοντα λιύσσω . . . παύσω τοὺς παρεστῶτας λόγους, but I will cease speaking...for I see Creon approaching, Euripid. Phœniss. 1318; (8) sometimes other words are inserted between ἀλλά and γάρ, as, ἀλλὰ τίς γὰρ εἶ, why, what are you then? i. e. if not a beggar, then something else, Aristoph. Acharn. 594; ἀλλ' οὐ γὰρ πως ἔστι, but it is not at all possible. See also under 'Αλλά γε.

Ἀλλά γε, but at least, surely, it must be allowed, nevertheless; εἰ μὴ πάντα, ἀλλὰ τά γε πλεῖστα, if not all, yet at least most of them, Aristot. Repub. i, p. 182; (2) sometimes other words are inserted between ἀλλά and γε, as εἴπερ οὐκ ἄλλως, ἀλλὰ νῦν γε, since not before, yet at least now, Demosth. Olynth. iii, p. 37, 18, ed. Reisk.

—— δή, even, nay even; also implying difference and urgency; also a transition or change of subject; ἀλλὰ δὴ θεοὺς οὔτε λαυθάνειν δύνατον, but it is not possible to conceal from the gods, Platon. Repub. ii, p. 365; ἀλλὰ δὴ τίνα γραφήν σε γέγραπται (with earnestness) but, come now, what accusation did he make against you? Plato; (2) sometimes ἀλλὰ δή are separated by other words, as, ἀλλ' ὅδε γὰρ δὴ βασιλεὺς...χωρεῖ, for now indeed the king...approaches or comes, Soph. Antig. 163; ἀλλὰ πῇ δή, in what way or manner then? Platon. Phædr. p. 269, e.

—— εἶα. See under 'Αλλά, I, 4.

—— ἤ, literally, but either; sometimes rendered, unless, except; ἀλλ' ἢ πρὶν μεθύειν, ἐπανίστασο, ἢ παρέων μὴ πίνε, but either rise before being intoxicated, or, if you remain present, do not drink, Epict. Enchir. cap. 24; οὐδὲν ὑπολείπεται ἀλλ' ἢ ποιεῖν προθύμως, nothing is left but (or unless) to perform with alacrity, Platon. Phædr. p. 231; ἀλλ' ἢ ἃ ἀναγινώσκετε, but, or unless the things which you read, 2 Cor. i, 13; (2) ἀλλ' ἤ is to be distinguished from ἀλλ' ἦ, which last is sometimes interrogative and sometimes affirmative; as ἀλλ' ἦ ὀδύνη σε τύπτει, what, has pain seized you? Xen. Symp. i, 15; ἀλλ' ἦ μέμηνας, why, are you mad? Soph. Electr. 879; ἀλλ' ἦ πέπονθα, truly, or indeed, I have suffered, Euripid. Alcest. 819. (3) ἀλλ' ἤ is also used for ἀλλά alone, and for ἤ alone; (4) and also for ἄλλος ἤ or ἄλλο ἤ, as, καὶ τὶ λοιπόν ἐστι ὑμῖν ἀλλ' ἤ, and what remains for you, but or other than, Demosth. contra Timocrat.

'Αλλ' ἤτοι, in which connexion, ἀλλά introduces something different from what has preceded, and τοί, being confirmative, presses what follows as preferable; as in Iliad i, 65, ἀλλά opposes banqueting to war, τοί presses the former, and ἤ, followed by μέν and δέ, indicates the distribution of the employments of preparing the supper and keeping watch; but however, i. e. leaving this (present subject) for another occasion; ἀλλ' ἤτοι μὲν ἐγὼν ἀποπαύσομαι, but I will cease then, Iliad xxi, 372, where cessation is opposed to the annoyance already suffered.

—— ἴθι, see above, 'Αλλά, I, 4.

—— καί, but also, moreover, yet more, besides; used with or without being preceded by οὐ μόνον, not only; as πάντες δακρύοντες πλὴν τῶν νεογνῶν τούτων καὶ νηπίων· ἀλλὰ καὶ οἱ πάνυ γεγηρακότες ὀδύρονται (for οὐ μόνον ἐκεῖνοι ἀλλὰ καί), all weeping, except new born children and infants, and not only those, but also very old men are lamenting, Lucian. Dial. Mort. p. 443; ἀλλὰ καὶ μέχρις Ἰνδῶν ἦλθον, I advanced moreover, even as far as to the Indi, Lucian. Dial. Mort. xii.

—— καὶ τοί, used indifferently for ἀλλὰ τοί, which see in its order, below.

—— μήν, but nay, but certainly or assuredly, Xen. Mem. i, 2, 2.

—— μενοῦνγε, or μὲν οὖν γε, (which are the same as μενοῦν, only stronger) but most certainly, but most assuredly; ἀλλὰ μενοῦνγε καὶ ἡγοῦμαι πάντα ζημίαν, nay most certainly also I count all things to be loss, Philip. chap. iii, 8, where Griesbach reads μὲν οὖν.

—— μέντοι γε, as ἀλλὰ μέντοι τὸ γε μέλειτᾶσθαι, but indeed care ought to be taken or provision made for, etc. Xen. Cyrop. i, 6.

Ἀλλὰ μή, as ἀλλὰ μὴ τοῖς ἤθεσι, and not by morals, Aristot. de Rep. ii, 5. See also 'Αλλ' οὐ. (2) Also interrogatively, as ἀλλὰ μή, is it not so?

—— μήν, certainly, most assuredly, moreover, besides, denotes affirmation or asseveration; as ἀλλὰ μὰν (for μὴν) καλαί, they (the pigs) are really beautiful ones, Aristoph. Acharn. 765; ἀλλὰ μὴν ὥσπερ σὺ λίγεις, certainly, or indeed, as you say Xen. Mem. ii, 6, 20; (2) sometimes ἀλλὰ and μὴν are separated by οὖ, as ἀλλ' οὐ μὴν ἄγε τις οἶδεν.

—— μήν γε, certainly, at least, moreover; ἀλλὰ μὴν οἵ γε φρόνιμοι καὶ οἱ ἀνδρεῖοι, ἀγαθοί, now certainly (i. e. if any thing must be granted, this at least must be, that) the wise and brave are good, Platon. Gorg. p. 498; this is sometimes put for ἀλλά μήν γε καί, as ἀλλὰ μὴν οὐσίαν γε ἔχοντα, but moreover certainly if he has property, etc. Plat. Phædr. p. 240.

—— μήν γε καί. See the preceeding, and also the following.

—— μὴν καί, besides, but besides, but moreover, but also; as, ἀλλὰ μὴν καὶ τὰ περὶ τὴν ἐφορείαν, but what regards the office of the ephori also, Platon. Rep. v, p. 468; (2) sometimes γε follows καί, some other word intervening; as ἀλλὰ μὴν καὶ μαχεῖταί γε πᾶν ζῷον, but moreover every animal also fights more earnestly, etc. Platon. Rep. v, 467.

—— μήν που, used to denote a less strong or more diffident assertion of one's opinion than ἀλλὰ μήν, as ἀλλὰ μήν που... κεκτῆσθαι δεξαίμεθ' ἂν μᾶλλον, but truly there is no doubt I think that we should rather take or select, Platon. Hipp. Maj. p. 375.

—— νὴ Δία and νὴ Δί' ἀλλά differ; the former best suits objections supposed by anticipation; the latter replies to objections; ἀλλὰ νὴ Δία, ἐκεῖνο γ' ἂν ἴσως εἴποι πρὸς ταῦτα, but indeed (or truly) he may perhaps reply to this, Demosth. c. Leptin. p. 457, 22, ed. Reisk.; νὴ Δία in such instances is only a slight affirmation, like truly, indeed, etc.

—— νῦν, but now at least, Soph. Antig. 552.

Αλλ' ὅμως, but yet, but at the same time, however; in the latter member of a sentence, when εἰ καί, καὶ γάρ, καίτοι, etc. occur in a preceding member; as, καὶ γὰρ οἱ στρατηγοὶ, ὦ φίλε, ἀλλ' ὅμως τὸ κεφάλαιον αὐτῶν, for though commanders do (great and honorable things), yet at the same time their greatest or chief thing is, etc. Platon. Euthyphr. p. 14; ἀλλ' ὅμως is often supplied by ὅμως δέ, as in Tab. Ceb.

—— ὅτε δή, but when, but the moment when, but as soon as, etc.

—— ὅτι, unless that; than that.

—— οὐ, in which expression the οὐ does not affect ἀλλά, but unites with something following, which it negatives; as φιλοσόφους, ἀλλ' οὐ φιλοδόξους, philosophers, or lovers of wisdom and not lovers of opinion, Platon. Repub. v, p. 450; ἀλλὰ μή is used by Plato in the same way.

—— οὐδέ, the same as οὐδὲ, but more emphatic or stronger; ἀλλ' οὐδ' ὥς, but not even so, that is, notwithstanding his earnest desire, Odys. i, 6.

—— οὐδ' ὥς. See the preceding.

—— οὖν, and ἀλλ' οὖν γε, but yet, yet at least; ἀλλ' οὖν ξυνετά μοι δόκεις λέγειν, yet, however, in my judgment you speak wisely, Eurip. Phœn. 501.

—— πέρ, then at least, but at least, used in the latter member of a sentence, when εἰ δέ is in the preceding; as εἰ δὲ καὶ ἐνθάδε...ἀλλά περ οἵος ἔτω, but if here also (the war is kindled) ...then at least let Ajax come alone, Iliad xii, 363; also 349.

—— ποῦ δή, ἀλλὰ πῶς δή, ἀλλὰ τί μήν, and the like, in which expressions there is an ellipsis of the imperatives, ἄγε, εἰπέ, etc., omitted through haste or eagerness; as, ἀλλὰ πῶς δή, but (say or tell) in what manner, etc. Platon. Phædr. p. 242; ἀλλὰ πῶς ποιεῖ, but (say or tell) how does he then? Xen. Cyrop. i, 3, 11.

—— τε, in the latter member of a sentence, when a preceding member has εἴπερ τε, εἴπερ γάρ, or εἴπερ γάρ τε, ὡς, εἴπερ γάρ τε χόλον...ἀλλά τε καὶ μετόπισθεν ἔχει κότον, for even if he represses his resentment...yet he nevertheless or certainly dissembles, until, etc. Iliad i, 82; also xxi, 577; xxii, 192.

Ἀλλὰ τί μήν. See above, ἀλλὰ ποῦ δή.

—— τοι, ἀλλά τοι καὶ, ἀλλὰ καί τοι, but indeed, but certainly, in which expressions τοι adds force or confirmation to what ἀλλά affects either as a discretive or adversative particle; and καί added also augments the force of it; ἀλλὰ κἀμέ τοι ταὐτὸν τόδ' ὄψει δρῶντα, and most assuredly you shall see me do the same, Soph. Philoct. 1248; (2) τοι strengthens the force of ἀλλὰ in objections or exceptions, as ἀλλ' ἡδύ τοι, ἦν αὐλὸς παρῇ, why that is a pleasant thing enough, if, etc.; ἀλλὰ τοι is also equivalent to ἀλλὰ μήν.

ΑΜΦΙ, prep. governing the gen. dat. and accus.; generally used like περί, as follows:

I. With the genitive case, about or near; ἀμφὶ ταύτης οἰκέουσι τῆς πόλιος, (who) inhabit that city, Herod. viii, 104; on account of, for the sake of, in behalf of; ἀμφὶ πίδακος μάχεσθαι, to fight or contend for the (possession of) the fountain, Iliad xvi, 825; ἀμφὶ φιλότητος, on account of, or about love, Odys. viii, 267.

II. With the dative, about or with, concerning, on account of; ἀμφὶ στήθεσσι, about or around his breast, Iliad ii, 389; ἀμφὶ πυρί, near the fire; ἀμφὶ γυναικί, for or on account of a woman; ἀμφὶ θυμῷ, through anger; ἀμφὶ ἀπόδῳ τῇ ἐμῇ, as to or concerning my departure, Herod. v, 19; ἀμφὶ ὀνύχεσσι, by his talons, Hes. Op. 205.

III. With the accusative, (1) around, about or nearly, towards; ἀμφὶ ῥέεθρα, about or around the rivers; ἀμφὶ ἄστυ, through or over the city; ἀμφὶ κρήνην, about or by the fountain; applied to time ἀμφὶ δείλην, about twilight, Xen. i; ἀμφὶ μέσον ἡμέρας, about mid-day; ἀμφὶ τὶ ἔχειν, to be occupied with any thing; ἀμφὶ βίοτον, during his life-time, Pind. Ol. i, 157. (2) With an accusative, when the article precedes, this preposition has a peculiar use; τὰ ἀμφὶ τὸν πόλεμον for τὰ πολεμικά, warlike things; ὁ ἀμφὶ τὸν χειμῶνα χρόνος, the winter season. (3) With an accusative signifying a person, it qualifies the phrase, so as to denote either first, the attendants of the person, as οἱ ἀμφ' αὐτὸν ὑπηρέται, his assistants or servants; or, secondly, the principal person himself, as οἱ ἀμφὶ Κορινθίους, the Corinthians, οἱ δ' ἀμφὶ Πρίαμον καὶ Πάνθοον, Priam and Panthoïs; or, thirdly, the person and his attendants both, οἱ ἀμφὶ Κῦρον, Cyrus with a part of his soldiers, etc.

IV. It is also used alone, adverbially; as ἀμφὶ δὲ ὄσσε πελαινὴ νὺξ ἐκάλυψεν, but dark night wholly overspread his eyes, Iliad v, 310; but in this case, as in Iliad vii, 316, ἀμφί may be separated from the verb by tmesis.

V. Sometimes ἀμφί is a mere pleonasm; as ἀμφὶ σοῦ νεκα, Soph. Phil. 554; where some, however, read σ' οὕνεκα.

VI. In compounds, it sometimes augments or strengthen the meaning of the simple verb and sometimes does not alter its force.

Remark. In this preposition there is never any anastrophe. Pinzger. Lex. Heder.

ΑΝ, conj. if; used with the indicative, optative, subjunctive, infinitive. and participle. For ἄν, Homer uses the enclitic κέ or κέν. It is not in Attic Greek construed with the present in dicative or with any mode of the future. It always implies a condition either expressed or understood; and its effect, generally, is to qualify or render less positive and certain any assertion or proposition:

I. With the indicative (or optative) it is generally preceded by εἰ, expressive of the conditional statement; and (1) with the imperf., of the indicative, it may be rendered by sh uld or would, as ταῦτα δὲ εἰ μὲν παρῆν λέγων ἂν ὑμᾶς ἐδίδασκον, if I were present, I should explain these things to you, Dem. Epist.; τότε μὲν εἶπεν ἄν, then he would say, or used to say, Xen. Cyrop. viii, 1, 10, implying a habit of saying or doing any thing; ἔγωγ' ἂν εἶπον εἰ παρὼν ἐτύγχανον, if I had happened to be present I should have spoken, Aristoph. Eccles. 407; οὐκ ἂν θαυμάσαιμι, εἰ μείζων εἰπόντί μοι γένοιτο παρ' ὑμῶν βλάβη, I should not be surprised if a heavier punishment awaited me mentioning, Demosth.; (2) before or after the pluperf. and aorists of the indic., should have or would have, as οὐδὲν ἄν, ὧν νυνὶ πεποίηκεν, ἐπραξεν, he would have done none of those things which he has now done, Dem. Philip. i; ἐκεῖνον ἂν ἐξέβαλον, εἰ, I should have turned him out, if, etc; ἐξήρπαστο ἂν τοιοῦτος, he would have been seized; (3) with the perf. mid. indic., should or would, as πάλαι ἂν ἀπολώλατε, you would have perished; (4) with the fut. of the indic. it strengthens the probability denoted by that tense, as ἐπόψομαι ἄν, I shall indeed (or certainly) live to see or be a witness of.

II. With the subjunctive and optative, the idea of future time is implied; as (5) before or after the imperf. or aorists of the optat. or subj., it may be rendered by may, might, would, as δόξας μὲν ἔγωγ' ἂν πού συγχωρεῖν, τὰ δ' ἕτερα ταῦτ' οὐκ ἄν, I might or would concede as to opinions, but, as to the other things, not, Plat. Phileb.; πᾶν ὅτι ἂν λέγῃς ἢ ποιῇς, whatever you may say or do; τί οὖν ἄν εἴπωσιν οἱ νόμοι, what then will the laws say, Plat. Crit. p. 116; ἅπαντ' ἄν, ἄν λέγω, whatever I may or shall) say, Aristoph. Acharn.; καὶ γένοι' ἂν οὐ κακός, and you will not be bad, Soph. Aj.; (6) when ἄν points to no previous conditional statement, but to a contingency, it takes the subjunctive, like ἐάν, as ἂν μέντοι πεισθῇτέ μοι, if, however, you would take my advice, Demosth. de Cor.; (7) ἄν, with the optative, denotes entreaty, as, λέγοις ἄν, say, I pray you, do say; χωροῖς ἂν εἴσω, pray enter, Soph. Electr. 1498; (8) it is frequently used with the optative, when a person wishes to express himself with a degree of delicacy and politeness towards others; but when no such reserve is required, the future indic. is used; as οὐ γὰρ ἂν ὑμῖν συνπέμψαιμι, in the first manner, and συνπέμψω for the latter. (9) ἄν with the interrogative particles is generally construed with the optative; πῶς οὖν ἂν ταῦτα δοκιμάσαιμεν, ὦ Σώκρατες, πρὸ τοῦ χρῆσθαι, but how, Socrates, could we know those things before experiencing, or using them, Xen. Mem. ii, 6, 6.

III. With the imperative; (10) εὖ τοῦτ' ἴσθ' ἄν, know this well then I pray you, Soph. Œd. Tyr. 1438; μηδὲ τοῦτο ἂν ἡμῖν ἄρρητον ἔστω, pray let not this be left unsaid by us, Plat. Alcib. p. 43.

IV. With the infinitive and participle; (11) before or after the pres. and aor. infin. and part. pres. and aor. it gives the force of a future, as ἡγοῦμαι καὶ πρῶτος ἀναστὰς, εἰκότως ἂν συγγνώμης τυγχάνειν, although I have risen the first, I think I shall obtain pardon; μηδὲν ἂν ἔτι κακὸν παθεῖν, for πίστισθαι, that I shall not suffer any farther ill. The conditional statement is frequently made by a participle, equivalent to εἰ with the indicative or optative, or is left by the writer to be inferred from the context, as, οὐκ ἂν γένοιτο νοῦς κακὸς, καλῶς φρονῶν, a mind being well disposed (or if well disposed) cannot be wicked, Soph. Œd. Tyr. 600; ἐπὶ ἀντάχνῃσ' ἂν ὕμνον Ἀρσίνων γίννᾳ, Eurip. Med. 426; the conditional proposition is here included in ἐπί.

V. Ἄν is sometimes repeated with the indicative, optative, infinitive, and participles; first, when it follows the conditional statement and several clauses intervene between it and the verb denoting the result; as στὰς ἄν, ὥσπερ οὗτος, ἐπὶ τὴ εἰσόδῳ, ἔπειτα, ὅποτε βούλοιτο εἰσίεναι ἐπ' ἄριστον, λέγοιμ' ἄν, Xen. Cyrop. i; secondly; it is repeated to make the sentence more emphatic, as οὐκ ἂν ἀποδοίην, οὐδ' ἄν, ὀβολον οὐδενί, I would not give, no I would not, a farthing to any one, Aristoph. Nub. 49. See Dunbar's Greek Exercises.

VI. Ἄν seems sometimes redundant; ἐπισχὼν ἄν, having waited, Dem. Philip. i, for ἐπισχών alone, or for ἕως ἄν, by transposition; μάλιστα ἂν τοῦτο δύνασθαι δόξειεν ἂν ἐκ τῶν εἰρημένων, from what has been said, it appears that he would be able to do this, Aristot. Eth. x, 9.

VII. It is sometimes understood, as, ὡς ἄμεινον μαχομένους, for μαχομένους ἄν, as if they would fight better, Xen. Cyrop. vi.

VIII. It is also used to denote a thing of frequent or habitual recurrence, as κλέπτειν ἂν περιῶν, he was accustomed to stealing, he would steal.

IX. It is also equivalent to the Latin cunque, as ὅστις ἄν, ὅ,τι ἄν, whosoever, whatsoever; οὐδεὶς ἄν, nobody whosoever.

X. Sometimes it may be rendered by ought, as οὐκ ἂν ἀγορεύοις, you ought not to harangue, Iliad ii, 250.

XI. It is also an abbreviation for ἐάν, if; the Poets use κε, κεν, instead of it; they also use ἄν for ἀνά, and ἄν for ἄνα.

Ἄν, conj. used with the subjunctive mood; for ἐάν, if, though; the Attic poets use ἤν for ἐάν, and never ἄν. Burney's Rev. of Porson's Hecuba, and Herman. ad Viger The tragic writers use it only in this connexion οὐδ' ἄν and in the crasis κἄν.

Ἄν, by apocope, before a consonant, for the preposition ἀνά, in the epic writers, before words beginning with γ or κ.

Ἄν, by apocope, for ἄνα, which is for ἀνίστη, (like ἴνι for ἴνεσαι) he arose or stood up, Iliad iii, 268, etc.; in this use, ἄν denotes the past tense; ἄνα, for ἀνάστηθι, imperat. of ἀνίστημι

Ἀν—, in some words beginning with a vowel, is equivalent to a negative, or α privative, like the negative particles in-, im-, and un-, in English.

Ἄνα, he arose by anastrophe, (1) for ἀνέστη, 3. sing. 2. a. ind. act. of ἀνίστημι· (2 also ἄνα, for ἀνάστα, and ἀνάστηθι, arise thou, 2. a. imperat. act.; (3) also ἄνα, voc. sing. of ἄναξ, and by apocope for ἄνασσα, but used only in addressing a deity.

Ἀνά, prep. governing generally the accusative, and, in the poets, the dative, and sometimes, though very rarely, the genitive, through, among, by, near, about, round, in, up; with the dative, upon, with; ἀνὰ τὴν Ἑλλάδα, through Greece; ἀνὰ τὸν ποταμόν, against the current of the river, up the river; ἀνὰ πρώτους, among the first; also used distributively, as ἀνὰ δηνάριον ἔλαβον, they received each a denarius; ἀνὰ πέντε, five by five or by fives; ἀνὰ μέρος, by turns; also for ἐν, as ἀνὰ στόμα, in one's mouth; ἀνὰ χρόνον, in time, in the course of time.

I. With the genitive; only in the expression ἀνὰ νηὸς ἔβην, he ascended or entered into the ship, Odys. ii, 416; ix, 177; xv, 284.

II. With the dative ἀνά is only found in the Dor. and Ion. poets, and in Homer very frequently; ἀνὰ σκήπτρῳ, with or upon the sceptre; ἀνὰ ὤμῳ, on his shoulder; ἀνὰ νυσίν, on or in the ships.

III. With the accusative; ἔθηκε ἀνὰ μυρίκην, he placed (them) upon a tamarisk, Hom.; ἀν' οἶκον, through the house, through all parts of the house, which is often the force of ἀνά. Koeler ad Simonid. de Mul. l. 3.

IV. It is also used as an adverb, without any case, as ἀνὰ βότρυες ἦσαν, and around or about, were clusters of grapes, Iliad xviii, 562.

V. In compounds it indicates (1) ascension, or direction upwards, as ἀναβαίνω, etc.; (2) it augments the force of the simple word, as ἀναγινώσκω, ἀνίημαι, etc.; (3) it denotes repetition, like the prefix re-; as ἀναθηλέω, to re-flourish; ἀνορθόω, to right again, as a ship, Œd. Tyr. 46. See Dunbar's Greek Exercises, p. 263.

Ἀντίπαις, παιδος, ὁ, ἡ, according to its derivation it would mean, παῖδι ἴσος, equal to a boy, almost a boy, (see ἀντήρως,) but it is used for one who has just passed his boyhood, who is near puberty; οὔπω πρόσηβος, whose cheeks are not yet clothed with the first down, Glossæ Labbeanæ: Ἀντίπαις· Pueraster. Suid. et Phav.: Ἀντίπαις· ὁ ἐγγὺς ὢν τοῦ ἴουλος γενέσθαι, ὁ τὸν πώγωνα ἐκφύων. Ulpian. Enarr. in Demosth. 191. (ap. Albert. ad Hesych.) Ὅ ἄπαις· ὁ νέος ἔτι καὶ παῖς, where Hieron. Wolfius, p. 258 — 263. 1. Reisk. reads rightly, ὁ ἀντίπαις. J. Poll. 2, c. 2.: Παιδίον, παιδάριον, παιδίσκος, παῖς, κοῦρος, ἥβιος, οὔπω πρόσηβος, ἀντίπαις, ὡς οἱ νεοὶ Κωμικοὶ, καὶ παλλάκια εἴρηκε Πλάτων ὁ Κωμικός. Pollux assigns it to the more recent comic writers, because the more ancient and the more Attic generally employed the word in the secondary sense of puer πρόσηβος, as we shall now show, Soph. ἐν Συνδείπνοις, ap. Athen. 15, p. 679. Οὗτοι γένειον ὧδε χρὴ διηλιφὶς Φορεῖντα, κἀντίπαιδα, καὶ γένει μέγαν, Γασπρὸς καλεῖσθαι παῖδα, τοῦ πατρὸς πάρον, which Grotius elegantly translates, Os te perunctum ferre nequaquam decet; Præsertim ephebum, genere tanto, filium Ventris vocari turpe, cum liceat patris. (But ἀντίπαις is never used by the Attics for ephebus.) Anton. Lib. Fab. 13, p. 92. Verh.: Ἕλαβε πρὸς τὴν ὄψιν ἀντίπαις ὤν, if he had reached ἥβης μέτρον, there could have been no concealment. Lucian Amor. 2, 398: Σχεδὸν γὰρ ἐκ τῆς ἀντίπαιδος ἡλικίας εἰς τοὺς ἐφήβους κριθείς, where J. F. Reitz has mistaken the meaning, which is better explained by J. Jensius Lectt. Luc. 89. Again, Lucian Somn. 21: Ταῦτα μέμνημαι ἰδὼν, ἀντίπαις ἔτι ὤν, where T. H. translates the words, Pueritiam tantum quod egressus: in the beginning of this tract, Lucian had written,

Ἄρτι μὲν ἐπεπαύμην εἰς τὰ διδασκαλεῖα φοιτῶν, ἤδη τὴν ἡλικίαν πρόσηδος ὤν. Lucian then uses ἀντίπαις and ἤδη τὴν ἡλικίαν πρόσηδος, about one and the same age, distinguishing this age from that implied by ἔφηβος. Glossæ Labbeanæ: Ἀντίπαις· juvenis. Where juvenis is καταχρηστικῶς used in the sense of πρόσηδος, βούπαις, ἀνδρόπαις. Grammaticus S. Germ. ap. Bekk. Anecd. Gr. 1, 407. Ἀντίπαις· ὁ πρόσηδος, καὶ ἀνδρόπαις, καὶ ὑπὲρ τὴν τοῦ παιδὸς ἡλικίαν. Suid. et Phav. Ἀντίπαις· — ὁ δὲ Ἀριστοφάνης (Grammaticus) τὸν πρόσηδον καὶ ἀνδρόπαιδα εἶπεν. Ammon. v. Γίρων· Βρέφος μὲν γάρ ἐστι τὸ γεννηθὲν εὐθέως· Παιδίον δὲ, τὸ τροφόμενον ὑπό τινηνοῦ· Παιδάριον δὲ, τὸ, ἤδη περιπατοῦν, καὶ τῆς λέξεως ἀντεχόμενον· Παιδίσκος δ' ὁ ἐν τῇ ἐχομένῃ ἡλικίᾳ· Παῖς δ' ὁ διὰ τῶν ἐγκυκλίων μαθημάτων δυνάμενος εἶναι· τὴν δ' ἐχομένην ταύτης ἡλικίαν, οἱ μὲν Πάλληκα, οἱ δὲ Βούπαιδα, οἱ δ' Ἀντίπαιδα, οἱ δὲ Μελλοέφηβον καλοῦσιν· ὁ δὲ μετὰ ταῦτα Ἔφηβος. Eust. ad Il. N. p. 944, 18, quotes the same matter from Aristophanes Gramm. In Hesychius we have: Παιδνός· νεογνὸς, παῖς νέος, ὁ ἐξερχόμενος ἀπὸ τῆς τοῦ παιδὸς ἡλικίας, ὁ παρὰ τοῖς Ἀττικοῖς καλούμενος ἀντίπαις. Ἀντίπαις, then, among Attic writers is the same as ἀνδρόπαις, and the precise age designated by both is apparent from Æsch. Pers. 529. (See Ἀνδρόπαις and Βούπαις,) i. e. that which clothes the cheeks with their first down, the 18th year complete; and the period extended to the 21*st year, which constituted the year of* full puberty. But in Plut. de Mul. Virt. 261, the word ἀντίπαις seems to be used in a sense unknown to the Attic writers: (Ἀριστόδημος) ἐπεκλήθη ὑπὸ τῶν βαρβάρων μαλακὸς, ὅπερ ἐστὶν ἀντίπαις, ὅτι μειράκιον ὢν παντάπασι μετὰ τῶν ἡλίκων ἔτι κομώντων, οὓς κορωνιστὰς, ὡς δοκεῖ, ἀπὸ τῆς κόμης ὠνόμαζον, ἐν τοῖς πρὸς τοὺς βαρβάρους πολίμοις ἐπιφανὴς ἦν καὶ λαμπρός, where it is to be translated adolescens, juvenis, ephebus. See Barker's Epist. Crit. ad Boiss., appended to Arcadius de Acc. 215 — 220. Hence it appears that those critics, who, (i. e. Alberti ap. Hesych. v., and J. F. Fischer Gramm. Gr. Spec. iii, Pi. Post. 103.,) consider the word to denote the age of puberty only, are as much mistaken, as those who, (like J. Jensius Lectt. Luc. 89.,) understand by it only the age below puberty. The confusion made by ancient grammarians and modern philologists, and the imperfect explanations of all lexicographers, have induced us to deliver our opinion on this word at length, and to support it by adequate authorities. Dunb. and Bark. In Diod. Sic. lib. xvi, c. 86, ἀντίπαιδα τὴν ἡλικίαν ὄντα is used to describe Alexander when he was just entering his nineteenth year; see Wesseling's edit. tom. ii, p. 148, not. 86, (and Plut. Alexand. c. 9;) it is, however, rendered by pubertatis annos ingressum, and in c. 38 of the same book, p. 111, to the same effect. In Dionys. Hal. lib. iv, c. 3, some read ἀντίπαις for παῖς.

ΑΠΟ', prep., compar. ἀπωτέρω, superl. ἀπωτάτω, governing the genitive, and referring to the origin or source from which any thing proceeds; it is most commonly to be rendered by our preposition from; sometimes by of; also for, on account of, be cause of; before or in the presence of; on the side of any party; in, at, on; after, since, before; by, by means of, through; it is properly used where the idea of motion or progress from one person or thing to another is implied; ἀπὸ βασιλῆος, from the king, i. e. coming from; ἀπ' Αἰγύπτου, from of Egypt; ἀπ' οὗ ἡμεῖς γεγόναμεν, from whom we are descended, Herodot. vii, 150; πορεύεσθε ἀπ' ἐμοῦ, depart from me, Math. xvii, 41.

The following examples will show various modes of rendering this preposition.

I. With the article preceding and a noun following it, signifying the source or origin, it may be rendered as follows; (1) οἱ ἀπὸ Πελοποννήσου, the Peloponnesians, literally, those who are from Peloponnesus; ἡ ἀπ' ἀλλήλων ὠφέλεια, mutual utility, literally, the utility of each other; ἡ ἀπὸ γραμμάτων ὠφέλεια, the utility of learning, i. e. which proceeds from learning; οἱ ἀπὸ παιδείας, the learned; οἱ ἀπὸ τῆς στοᾶς for οἱ στωϊκοί, the Stoics; τὰ ἀπ' ἐμοῦ, my affairs; but sometimes in such expressions it indicates those who have just finished doing something, as οἱ ἀπὸ τῆς ὑπατείας, those who have finished their duties as consuls, i. e. the men of consular rank.

II. With nouns; — (2) nouns denoting the origin, source, or occasion of any thing; as καλέουσι ἀπὸ τῶν μητέρων ἑωϋτούς, they name themselves after, or from, their mothers, Herodot. i, 173; ἀφ' ἡλίου βολαί, the eastern parts or region; — (3) with nouns signifying the place from whence, or the person from whom, as ἀπὸ τοῦ ὄρους, from the mountain, Mark ix, 9; ἀφ' ἵππων μάχεσθαι, to fight from their horses, or on horseback; ἀπὸ χαρᾶς, for joy; ἀπὸ τῆς παρούσης δυνάμεως, according to present means; ὅσον ἀπὸ βοῆς ἐνεκεν, as much as possible by words or outcry, and not in reality, Xen. Hist. ii, 4, 21, and Thucyd. viii, 92, which are the only two instances found of this remarkable phraseology. See Wyttenb. Select. 414; — (4) with nouns signifying distance, interval, removal from; as τέσσερα στάδια ἀπὸ λίμνης, four stadia or furlongs from the lake, Herodot. iv, 195; ὡς ἀπὸ σταδίων δεκαπέντε, at a distance of about fifteen furlongs, John xi, 18; ἔστασι δὲ ταῦτα οὐκ ἀπὸ τοῦ πράγματος, these things are not far from, or wide of, the matter, Demosth.; ἀπ' ἀνατολῶν, towards, or on, the east; — (5) with nouns signifying time, as ἀπὸ καταβολῆς κόσμου, from the (time of) foundation of the world, Matth. xiii, 35; ἀπὸ γενεᾶς, from his birth; ἀπὸ δείπνου, after supper, Herodot. i, 133, whence, ἀπὸ δείπνου γίνεσθαι, to have done supper; ἀπὸ πρωὶ ἕως ἑσπέρας, from morning to evening; ἀπὸ παίδων, from childhood; ἀπὸ σάλπιγγος, from (the time of sounding) the trumpet; ἀπὸ τοῦ πολέμου, from the time of the war; ἀφ' οὗ, for ἀφ' οὗ χρόνου, from, or since, which time; — (6) with nouns denoting the price or value; as ἀπὸ ταλάντων ἑξήκοντα, for sixty talents, Demosth. Cor.; ἀπὸ σμικρᾶς δαπάνης, at little expense, Aristoph. Eq. 535; — (7) with nouns signifying the materials of which any thing is made, as ἔνδυμα ἀπὸ τριχῶν καμήλου, a garment of camel's hair, Matth. iii, 4; — (8) sometimes ἀπό gives a noun or adjective the effect of an adverb; as ἀπὸ σπουδῆς, deliberately or seriously, Iliad vii, 359; ἀπὸ στόματος, from memory, by heart, Plat. Theat. 1; ἀπὸ τύχης, fortuitously, by chance, Demosth.; — (9) with nouns signifying the cause, manner, and instrument, etc., as ἀπ' ἀργυρέοιο βιοῖο, with his silver bow, Iliad xxiv, 605; ζῶσι δὲ ἀπὸ λῃΐης, they live by pillage, Herodot. iv, 103; ἀπὸ φόβου, through, or on account of fear, Luke xxi, 26; ἀπὸ τῆς φιλοσοφίας, on account of his philosophy, Plut. Apoph.; ἀπὸ προγόνων, after the manner of our fathers, 2 Tim. i, 3; ἀπὸ θυμοῦ μᾶλλον ἐμοὶ ἔσαι, thou shalt be more out of my favor, or odious to me, Iliad, i, 563, Apol. Rhod.

III. With adjectives (10) denoting privation or exemption from any thing; as ἀθῷος εἰμὶ ἀπὸ τοῦ αἵματος, I am clear or free from the blood of, i. e. am innocent of, Matth. xxvii, 24, and Acts xx, 26; — (11) sometimes it gives to adjectives and substantives the force of adverbs, as ἀπὸ τοῦ ἀδοκήτου, unexpectedly, Thucyd. vi, 47; ἀπὸ τοῦ φανεροῦ, for φανερῶς, openly, not secretly or privately, Thucyd. i; — (12) with the superlatives βελτίστου and κρατίστου, it sometimes means with good intentions, with proper feelings, as ὁ δὲ ἀγαθὸς, καὶ ἀπὸ τοῦ κρατίστου, but the good man, with good intentions too, etc.

IV. With pronouns; (13) ἀπ' ἐμαυτου, ἀφ' ἑαυτοῦ, ἀφ' ἑαυτῶν, voluntarily, of one's own accord, literally, by myself, himself, or themselves; also by one's self, without the aid of any one, Luke xxi, 30; also by one's own authority, John vii, 17; οἱ μὲν καὶ αὐτοὶ ἀφ' ἑαυτῶν, they (did) of themselves, or of their own accord, in contradistinction to being ordered, Cyrop. v, 5.

V. With the relative; (14) ἀφ' οὗ and ἀφ' οὗ χρόνου, since or from which time; in which use ἀφ' οὗ sometimes occurs after a plural, as δέκα ἔτη ἀφ' οὗ (χρόνου) ἂν ἐξέλθωσι, ten years after they quit the order of boys, Cyrop. i, 2, 9.

VI. After verbs which include the idea of delivering or liberating, fleeing from, avoiding, purifying or cleansing from, and also of filling; as σώσει ἀπὸ τῶν ἁμαρτίων, he shall save or deliver from their sins, Matth. i, 21; γεμίσαι ἀπὸ τῶν κεράτιων, to fill with the husks or coarse food, Luke xv, 16. In the N. T. it is particularly used after verbs of eating, hiding, concealing, and fearing.

VII. With adverbs; — (15) of place, as ἀπ' οὐρανόθεν, from the skies, from heaven, Iliad viii, 365; ἀπὸ μακρόθεν, from afar off, or at a distance, Matth. xxvi, 58; ἀπὸ κρῆθεν, from the head, Hes. Scut. 7; in which instances ἀπό seems to be redundant; ἀπὸ τοῦ παραχρῆμα, immediately; — (16) of time; as ἀπὸ πρωὶ ἕως ἑσπέρας, immediately after, or from, the morning until evening, Acts xxviii, 23; ἀπὸ τότε, from then, or from that time, Matth. xvi, 21; ἀπὸ πέρυσι, since or from the last year, 2 Cor. viii, 10; ἀπ' ἄρτι, from now, from this time, henceforward, Matth. xxvi, 29, and ἀπὸ νῦν in the same sense.

VIII. In compounds (17) it has the force of from, out of, thence, off, and of the inseparable particle re-, as used in the Latin and English; as ἀποκαθίστημι, to re-place, re-store; ἀποδίδωμι, to re-deliver or give back; — (18) sometimes it increases the force of the verb and sometimes not; as ἀποθαυμάζω, to wonder greatly; but ἀποτρέχειν, simply like τρέχειν, to run; ἀπανσαν, like ἀντᾶν, to meet; ἀπισθίειν, to eat of any thing, for ἀπό τινος ἰσθίειν· so ἀπογεύσασθαι for ἀπό τινος γεύσασθαι· ἀπελπίζειν for ἀπό τινος ἐλπίζειν, to hope for from another person or thing, Luke vi, 35; — (19) in many compounds it has the force of α privative, as ἀπότιμον for ἄτιμον, Soph. Œd. Tyr. 215; — (20) sometimes it gives the force of negation or refusal, as ἀπόφημι, to deny; ἀπειπεῖν, to deny or refuse, Iliad i, 515, where it is used in opposition to κατανεύειν, to assent; ἀπόμαχοι, those who are not fighting men, or who are unfit for fighting, used in opposition to μάχιμοι, Arrian.; ἀποδιδάσκειν, to be away from teaching, dedocere.

IX. In many instances ἀπό is redundant; as ἀπὸ τῆς ἐλαίης τοὺς κλάδους, branches of the olive tree, Herodot. vii, 19, the same as τοὺς τῆς ἐλαίης κλάδους· οἶνον ἀπ' ἀμπέλων, for τῆς ἀμπέλου, wine of the vine, Hybr. Cretens.; in which instances, the use of the preposition seems to be similar to the mode of expressing a genitive in the Modern Greek and in other modern languages by means of a preposition; ἡ ἀπὸ τούτων ἑτοιμότης, their inclination or promptitude in my favor, Demosth.

X. It is also used instead of the prepositions ἐκ, ἐπί, περί, and ὑπό· — (21) for ἐκ, as ἀπ' ἑκατὸν καὶ εἴκοσι παίδων εἷς μοῦνος ἀπίφυγε, out of a hundred and twenty youths one only escaped, Herodot. vi, 27; — (22) for ἐπί or περί, as ταῦτα μὲν τὰ ἀπὸ σουτέων τῶν ποταμῶν, these are the things (which I had to relate) concerning these rivers, Herodot. iv, 53; συθίσθαι ἀπὸ τῆς Ξέρξεω στρατιῆς, to ask respecting the army of Xerxes, vii, 195; — (23) for ὑπό, as ἀπὸ τῶν ἀντιστασιωτῶν καταλευθῆναι, were stoned by those of the opposite party, Pausan. Corinth.

XI. By tmesis it is often found separated from the verb to which it belongs, as ἀπὸ μὲν ἔθανε (for ἀπέθανε) ὁ στρατηγὸς....ἀπὸ δὲ ἄλλοι πόλλοι, the commander fell or died, and many others also, Herodot. viii, 89; in which last member, the verb belonging to ἀπό is understood.

"The preposition is precisely the same as the Latin ab and the Anglo-Saxon af, the same as of." Dunbar and Barker. Probably the Hebrew אַב, ab, denoting the father, author, origin, or source of any thing.

XII. "The privative α appears to be this preposition abbreviated, when used in a negative sense; thus, ἀπότιμος is the same as ἄτιμος, ἀπόθειστος as ἄθειστος· ἄῤῥητος and ἀπόῤῥητος· ἀποκαίριον the same as ἄκαιρον, Soph. Phil., 456. See Greek Exerc. p. 247." Dunbar and Barker.

Some Grammarians accent this word on the penult, ἄπο, when it means far from, apart, away from; as Wolf, in his Homer, Odys. xv, 517, but no where else. Passow's Lex. See the next.

Ἄπο, (accented on the penult) adv. afar, at a distance; but ἄπο for ἄπειστι, he is off, from ἄπειμι· and ἄπο for ἀπιθι, go off, begone, from ἄπειμι, to go away. The prepositions unaccompanied by a case are often used as adverbs, and the accent is then thrown back, as in ἄπο.

Ἀπὸ αὐτοῦ, from that time.

Ἀποαίνυμαι, σαι, ται, the same with ἀπαίνυμαι, to take away, deprive, despoil; imperf. ind. ἀποαινύμην, Ion. for ἀπωνύμην, σο, το. From ἀπό and αἴνυμαι.

Ἀποαιρεῖσθαι, pres. inf. pas. for ἀφαιρεῖσθαι. Poet. and Ion.

Ἀποαίρω, Ion. for ἀφαίρω, 2. sing. pres. imp. pas. from the same.

Ἀποαιρίομαι, οῦμαι, Ion. and Poet. in Hom. and Herodot. for ἀφαιρίομαι, to take away, remove.

Ἄρ, before a consonant, for ἄρα, Hom.; epic form, ῥά, which is enclitic, akin to ἄρω, and so implying close connection. See ἄρα.

Ἄρα, conj. or indeclinable particle, with an acute accent (and by Epic usage ἄρ and ῥά, which last is an enclitic); it always follows some other word in a phrase, and may generally be rendered by therefore, wherefore, then; but, like other words called expletives, it cannot be easily and precisely rendered by any peculiarly appropriate English word; τίς ἄρα, who, who then; τί ἄρα, what then, what therefore, what now, etc.; ἐπεὶ ἄρα, since then; it is often used with γε or οὖν, as ἄραγε, ἄρα οὖν, therefore, wherefore. It is usually assumed to be derived from the verb ἄρω, implying a close connection as antecedent and consequent, or as being united or fitted together, and denoting more or less strongly an inference; others, however (see Jones's Lex.), give it the same common origin with ὁράω, and the signification of lo! behold! etc. In those instances where it seems to have no force (according to Buttmann), there lies at the basis the idea of conformably to nature or custom, properly, suitably; hence it serves as a transition to a proposition which may be anticipated. Its principal uses, when alone, or taken in connection with other particles, will sufficiently appear by the following examples:

I. When alone, ἄρα indicates (1) an inference or conclusion from something previously said or admitted, and may be rendered by therefore, then, accordingly; as, ἀλλὰ μὴν εἰσι βώμοι, εἰσίν ἄρα καὶ θεοί, but there are altars, therefore there are gods also, Lucian. Jov. Tragœd.; εἰ δὲ Χριστός οὐκ ἐγήγερται, κενὸν ἄρα τὸ κήρυγμα ἡμῶν, if Christ be not risen, then (therefore) is our preaching vain, 1 Cor. xv, 14; (2) it may be rendered by truly, indeed, surely; as ὁ δ' ἄρ' Αἰακὸς ἐκ Διὸς ἦεν, Æacus himself indeed was from Jove, Il. xxi, 189; it is also used in expressions alluding to time, thus; τῆμος ἄρ' ἀμφὶ πυρὴν, then indeed, or, and then (i. e. when morning came) around the funeral pile the people assembled, Il. xxiv, 789; (3) it is continually used by the poets, where a speech is closed, and a transition is made to something else; as, ὡς ἔφατ', οἱ δ' ἄρα πάντες ἐπίαχον, thus he spoke, and then, or thereupon, they all shouted applause, Il. vii, 403; (4) in a continued narrative of particulars ἄρα is often interchanged with δέ and ἔπειτα, in the same sense, as in Il. xxiii, 490, seqq.; (5) also for ἴσως or που, as in Il. i, 65.

II. With other particles ἄρα is used for perchance, perhaps, haply, as follows: (1) with ἄν, as ἄν ἄρα σωθῶσι, if perchance they shall get off in safety, Dem. Megalopol. 216; (2) with δέ, as, ὡς ἄρ' ἔφη ποταμὸς δὲ χολώσατο, thus indeed he spoke, but the river was indignant, Il. xxi, 136; (3) with ἐάν, as ὥστε ἐὰν ἄρα πολλάκις νυμφόληπτος, so that if I shall appear often to be nymph-stricken, Platon. Phædr. 238; but sometimes ἄρα is separated from the other particles by other words in a phrase, as ἐὰν δὲ ἀνενέγκωσιν ἄρα οἱ Θηβαῖοι, but if perchance the Thebans shall have come off, etc., Dem. Megalopol. 216; (4) with εἰ, in the same sense with ἐάν, as, εἰ ἄρα ἀφεθήσεταί σοι ἡ ἐπινοία τῆς καρδίας σου, if perhaps the thought of thine heart may be forgiven thee, Acts viii, 22; εἰ ἄρα γε ψηλαφήσειαν αὐτόν, if haply they might feel after him, ib. xvii, 27; the particle ἄρα is also sometimes separated from ει, ως, ει τις ἰδία τινὰ δεδιὼς ἄρα, if perchance any one is apprehensive on his own account, Thucyd. iv, 86; (5) with οὔτε, ας, οὔτ' ἄρ ὄγε ἐπιμέμφεται, nor indeed does he accuse or blame us, Il. i, 93; (6) with ποτε, as, τί ποτ' ἄρ ἡ κάπνη ψύφει, but why, now, does the chimney sound so, or make such a noise, Aristoph. Vesp. 143; and sometimes, as in the preceding instances, ἄρα and ποτε are separated by words interposed, as in Vesp. 273.

In the N. T., contrary to the usage of the Greek classic writers, ἄρα occurs as the first word of a sentence or phrase, in the sense of therefore, then, consequently, etc.; as in Rom. x, 17; Heb. iv, 9. See the next.

†Ἆρα, circumflexed, an interrogative particle; in accent and meaning more forcible than ἄρα, and usually employed when a negative answer is anticipated, but sometimes also when an answer is expected in the affirmative; see Eurip. Alcest. 229, and Woolsey's note; ἆρ' οὐ is also used, when an affirmative is confidently expected; and also in exclamations, as ὀδυνηρὸς ἆρ' ὁ πλοῦτος! Eurip. Phœn. 575. †Ἆρα is used with various particles, as in the following examples; (1) with γε, when a question is confined to something conceded, and is only intended to urge the conceded point and not to ask for information; as, ἆρα γε οὐ χρὴ πάντα ἄνδρα, ought not every man indeed then, *etc., Xen. B

B, the second letter of the Greek alphabet, is called Βῆτα, Beta, and as a numeral (β'), it denotes two; but with a mark under it (β,), 2,000. The ancient pronunciation of it was softer than that of the English B, and resembling that of the Spanish and Modern Greek; so that the later Greek writers used it to express the Roman V, as Βάῤῥων for Varro, Βιργίλιος for Virgilius, etc. With the Modern Greeks it has a sound between the English V and W, which may be formed by barely touching the upper teeth to the lower lip, instead of pressing them so strongly upon it as we are accustomed to do in pronouncing our V. — The Æolians and Dorians used it as a simple aspirate before the letter ρ, as βρόδον βράκος, for ῥόδον ῥάκος, and also before vowels, as βέδος for ἕδος, etc. It was often inserted between μλ and μρ, to give a fuller sound, as in μεσημβρία, μέμβλεται, ἄμβροτος, ὄμβριμος. — It was often interchanged with other consonants in different dialects; (1) with π, by the Delphians, Tarentines, and Sicilians, as βατεῖν for πατεῖν, (2) with δ by the Æolians and Bœotians, as βελφίν for δελφίν, (3) with ζ by the Arcadians, as ζίλλω for βάλλω, (4) with γ, as γλήχων by the Attics for βλήχων, γλέφαρον, Æol. and Dor. for βλέφαρον, (5) with κ, as in τήκω and the Latin tabeo, (6) with μ, as μεμβράς for ἐμβράς, (7) with φ, by the Macedonians, as Βίλιππος for Φίλιππος, (8) by the later writers, in diphthongs, as ἄβρα for αὔρα, καλάβρυψ for καλαύρυψ, etc. The Delphians use β for π, as βικρός for πικρός. The Macedonians, β for φ, as Βίλιππος for Φίλιππος. — At the beginning of words it is sometimes redundant, or substituted for an aspirate, as βρόδον, for ῥόδον.

Δαΐφρων, ονος, ὁ, ἡ, warlike, skilful in war; brave; its general meaning in the Iliad; but in the Odyssey commonly, experienced, skilful, wise, prudent. Prof. Dunbar observes, "As this adjective scarcely ever signifies prudent in the Iliad, whereas in the Odyssey this is its general acceptation, some critics have therefore inferred that these poems were the productions of different authors. But this argument seems to have very little weight, as the qualities of the principal characters in the two poems are essentially different. In the Iliad the actions of heroes are described; we therefore expect to find them characterized by the qualities that become them as warriors. In the Odyssey, on the contrary, no such qualities are called into action; we accordingly find those that befit the actors in their social and political state." Fr. δαΐς, or δαίω, and φρήν.

Δαϊχθείς, έντος, part. 1. a. pas. of δαΐζω, to kill, to wound. From it was generally suspended from the sail-yard, and when thrown into an enemy's ship it frequently sunk it; τοὺς δελφῖνας μετεωρίζου, hoist aloft the dolphins, Aristoph. Eq. 762. A late English writer observes, that there seems no necessity for supposing that this implement of naval warfare "was made in the shape of a dolphin; bars of iron, used for ballast, are at the present day called pigs, though they bear no resemblance to that animal." Smith's Dict. of Gr. and Rom. Antiquities. It is worthy of notice, that the word dolphin is a nautical term at this day, in the English language, and is applied to two different things; one is a species of floating buoy (or sometimes a fixed post), to which vessels may be made fast while lying in a harbour; the other, formerly called the dolphin of the mast, is described by nautical writers as a kind of band made of a piece of hawser-laid rope, reaching nearly round the ship's mast, and having an eye spliced in each end and pointed over the whole length; it is lashed occasionally round the mast, through the eyes, as a support to a kind of stuffed or padded bandage, technically called the puddening, whose use is, to sustain the weight of the lower yards, in case the rigging or chains, by which those yards are suspended, should be carried away in battle or otherwise. But this dolphin of the mast has been for sometime superseded by the improved methods of supporting the yards, so that the term, in this sense, is not familiar to all seamen. But Δελφίς, ίδος, ἡ, the priestess of Apollo at Delphi; μελλίσσας Δελφίδος, Pind. Pyth. iv. 60.

ΔΙΑ' (oxytone), prep. governing the genitive and accusative. With the genitive it commonly signifies through, through a body or place; sometimes through or by means of. With the accusative, through means of, on account of, by reason of, through. The following examples will show its various uses:

I. With a genitive case it denotes,

(1) through, so as to penetrate, through a space, through time, through means of; ὅστ' εἶσιν διὰ δουρός, which penetrates through wood, Il. iii, 61; διὰ μέσου αὐχένος, through the middle of the neck, Eurip. Phœn. 1471; τιτρώσκει διὰ τοῦ θώρᾶκος, and wounds him through the corslet, Xen. Anab. i, 8, 18; ἐπορεύθησαν διὰ τοῦ πεδίου, they marched through the plain, Id. iv, 4, 4. With nouns denoting place, interval, space; as, διὰ θαλάσσης, over the sea, and also by or near the sea, as in Herodt. iv, 39; διὰ πεδίου, on or over the plain, i. e. all over the plain, Il. xi, 753.

(2) With nouns denoting time or duration; as, διὰ παντὸς τοῦ αἰῶνος, continually, perpetually for ever; διὰ παντός, through the whole, i. e. to the end; also, wholly; διὰ βίου, for life, during life; δι' ἔτους, for a year; διὰ δέκα ἐτῶν, every tenth year; διὰ τρίτου ἔτεος, every third year, Herodt. ii, 14; δι' ἡμέρης, for a day, the whole day; διὰ νυκτός, during the whole night, for the night; διὰ πεντηρίδος, every fifth year, Herodt. iii, 97; διὰ πολλοῦ χρόνου, after a long interval, Xen.; δι' ὀλίγης παρασκευῆς, after a short preparation, Thucyd. iv, 8.

(3) With other nouns, or pronouns; as, δι' ἑαυτοῦ κατασκευάξειν, to instruct or discipline (them) by himself, Xen. Cyr. viii, 1; διὰ πίστεως, by means of plighted faith, Xen. Anab. iii, 2; διὰ τῶν ὀμμάτων, by the eyes, Plat. Crat. 32; δι' ἀφροσύνης, through folly, or foolishly; διὰ τοῦ δικαίου, for δικαίως, by means of what is just, i. e. justly; αἱ διὰ τοῦ σώματος, corporeal pleasures, literally, pleasures which are by means of the body, Plat. Phæd. c. 9; ἡ διὰ τῶν ὅρκων πίστις, the faith which is (pledged) by means of oaths, Æschin. c. Ctes.; διὰ μάχης, by fighting; καὶ διὰ μάχης ἤδη ἐγίγνοντο αἱ ἰσκομιδαί, Thucyd. vii, 24; ἧς νῦν τὸν υἱὸν κτείνει δι' ἐμεῦ, whose son he now slays through me, i. e. through my instrumentality, Herodt. i; ἡ ὁδὸς διὰ σκότους, for σκοτεινή, the way (which is) through darkness or a dark way, Xen. Anab. ii, 5, 2.

(4) With some adjectives implying duration or continuance, it is used as follows: διὰ βραχέων, briefly, shortly, Plat. Tim.; διὰ βραχυτάτων, as soon as possible, Id.; δι' ἐλαχίστων, in the briefest manner, Lys.; διὰ πλειόνων εἰπεῖν, to speak long, literally, in many words; διὰ μακροτέρων, more at length, Isocr. Pan. 30. With adjectives denoting distance or space, διὰ is thus used: κῶμαι διὰ πόλλου, villages at a great distance from each other, or far apart, Thucyd.; οἱ διὰ πλείστου, the most distant or remote, Id. iii, 115.

(5) With verbs used as nouns of time; as διὰ παντὸς τοῦ ζῆν, through one's whole life. With certain nouns in the genitive, accompanied by the verbs ἔχω, λαμβάνω, τίθημαι, and some others, it forms a construction which is elegantly substituted for the verbs formed from those nouns; as, δι' ἐλπίδος ἔχειν, for ἐλπίζειν, to hope; διὰ τιμῆς ἔχειν, to honor; διὰ θαύματος ἔχειν, to wonder or admire; δι' οἴκτου λαβεῖν, to pity, to commiserate, Dion. Hal. lib. x; δι' αἰτίας ἔχειν, to accuse, to object to, and δι' αἰτίας εἶναι, to be accused; δι' ὠφελείας τίθεσθαι, to profit by; the substantive verb is also used in the same way, as κἀμοὶ δὲ δι' εὐχῆς ἐστι, it is my wish or prayer, instead of εὔχομαι. Also the verb ἄγω, as διὰ σπουδῆς ἦγε, esteemed or valued highly; δι' ἀθυμίας γίνεσθαι, to be depressed or disheartened, Dion. Hal. lib. vi; δι' ἀσφαλείας γίνεσθαι, to be secure or safe.

II. With an accusative case, it denotes,

(1) The cause, manner, and instrument by or through which any thing is done; as, οὐ δι' ἐμέ, not through me, i. e. not through my fault, Dem. de Coron.; δι' ἐκεῖναν, by him, through his means, Dion. Hal.; εἰ μὴ δι' ἐμέ, if it had not been for me, if I had not prevented; εἰ μὴ δι' ὑμᾶς, if it had not been for you, i. e. but for you, Demosth.; διὰ βουλὰς Διός, according to the will of Jove, Odys. viii. 82; διὰ νύκτα, by the night, or through favor of the night, Il. viii, 510; διὰ τὸ πῦρ, by means of fire, Xen. Cyr. iii, 3, 13.

(2) With a verb in the infinitive used as a noun; as, διὰ τὸ πιστεύειν, because of their believing, or because they believed, Xen. Cyr. vi, 1, 21; διὰ τὸ μὴ σοφοὶ εἶναι, because they are not wise, Plat. Gorg., where the use of the nominative case with the infinitive mode is observable; διὰ τὸ μὴ ἴσχειν ῥίζαν, because it had no root, Matt. xiii, 5, 6.

(3) In compound words, διά denotes, —first, through, throughout, thoroughly; over, across; as, διαφαίνειν, to shine or show through any thing; διαβαίνειν, to pass through or over; διορύττειν, to dig or pierce through; —secondly, the completion or accomplishment of any thing; as, διαπερᾶν τὸν βίον, to pass through or complete one's life, Xen. Œcon. xi, 7; διακρίνειν, to complete or bring to an end a trial at law, Demosth.; —thirdly, continuance or duration; as, διαμένειν, and διατίλειν, to remain, to last, to be permanent; —fourthly, distribution, division, or sharing of any thing; as, διαγγέλλειν, to send messengers to various places, to send them all about, Demosth.; διαδιδόναι, to divide or share among several; διαλέγομαι, to interchange words, to converse; —fifthly, separation or being apart from; as, διακαθίζειν, to place apart or aside from others, Xen. Œcon. vi. 6; διατειχίζειν, to separate by a wall, to wall out one part of a city from another, Demosth.; —sixthly, secrecy or privacy; as, διακλαπῆναι, to be surreptitiously taken, Polyb. viii, 27; —seventhly, διά increases the force of the simple word with which it is compounded; as, διαγωνιᾷν, to be very apprehensive, to be agonized in one's feelings, Polyb. iv, 10; διόμνυσθαι, to swear with the most solemn adjurations, Demosth.; —eighthly, διά often conveys the idea of a contest or trial of skill; as, διαπίνειν, to contend or strive together in drinking, Herodt. v, 18.

(4) Like other prepositions, διά is often disjoined from the simple word with which it is considered to be compounded; as, διὰ δὲ στήθεσφιν (for στηθέων) ἔλασεν, for διέλασεν, pierced through his breast, Il. v, 57; διὰ πάντα τελευτᾷ, for διατελευτᾷ, Id. xix, 90; and sometimes, when thus disjoined, it is placed after the simple word with which it makes a compound, as ἵνα τάμῃ διὰ πᾶσαν, for διατάμῃ, he cuts through the whole sinew, Il. xvii, 522.

(5) It is also often understood, as in the following example, πεδίοιο διώκετο, for διὰ πεδίου, Il. xxi, 602.

(6) It is also often joined with ἐκ and πρό· as, δι' ἐκ προθύρου, through, outside of, or beyond the vestibule, Il. xv, 124; διὰ πρὸ ἀντικρὺ κατὰ κύστιν, wholly through the part of the body opposite the bladder, Il. v, 66.

(7) With a noun it sometimes forms an adverbial expression; as, δι' ἀφροσύνης, unadvisedly, unwisely, Xen. Cyr. iii, 1, 10; for other examples of this kind, which may be rendered either adverbially or otherwise, see above. "It probably owes its derivation to δύω or δύνω. See Greek Exercises, 4th edit., p. 205." Dunbar's Lex.
